The 2017 Georgia Winter Institute (GWI) strives to build more inclusive communities through better transition opportunities, community building, futures planning and Roving Listening.

This amazing event brings people together from across Georgia and the Southeast to collaborate on community building efforts using person-centered philosophies and value-based ideas that result in stronger neighborhoods and more active and involved populations of people with disabilities.

GWI attendees will have the opportunity to learn from leaders in the field, as well as each other. Conference goers will utilize community building and person-centered planning to gain the tools needed to create greater towns, build empowering relationships and create opportunities for members of our communities who are often marginalized and forgotten.
